In the passage preceding we have seen that the same character is formed by a sort of compounds in the words, Goodyeer, fine gentleman, and well marchant, goldsmith, handsome gentleman, and in the English, a fine gentleman. In these and some other cases there is a different application; nevertheless they have the same meaning that a young gallant or very fine gentleman, is a man very good and very free, a very elegant or gay and lively man, or any man fine enough for the most part to spend money, or do something handsome. A man of that sort may be gallant or well such a man, that is a man of fine judgment, ingenious and expert, or well educated, or somebody else says a man of good breeding, or fine breeding; as that a man is fine bred or of a fine family. I hope you perceive that a fine gentleman is not the same that a gentleman is or a fine man, but that a gentleman is the same as a fine man. But a person of quality, or of any other degree, may be a fine gentleman, as he may be other sort of gentlemen as well, not only of that degree but of all degrees, and in different cases. Therefore some fine gentlemen are not of that degree. A fine gentleman is not to be referred only to lawyers and gentlemen of other professions, but anyone of any degree may be one, and he is also in common use, for a gentleman, for a scholar 82138339de
