Since then, it has continued to be one of the most popular editing tools for photographers and graphic designers. In particular, it is essential for those who want to enter the industry and those who don't want to spend a ton of money. In this post, I will compare Photoshop and Photoshop Elements and what makes each of these programs better than the other, especially for photographers, graphic designers, and digital artists. What's inside Adobe Photoshop and Photoshop Elements? Photoshop is a very powerful tool with a simple user interface. However, it may be too large and cumbersome for new users to learn. Many photoshop users have learned how to use Photoshop in a certain way that may not be ideal. Photoshop Elements is a subset of Photoshop and contains many of the same features of Photoshop. It is often considered a cheap alternative to the more expensive Photoshop. Photoshop Elements is a good option for beginners who are looking for a simpler tool for editing images. In particular, Photoshop Elements is a graphic editor that includes the following features and tools: Basic editing tools Color wheels 2D and 3D Artistic filters 3D effects and rotations Image layers Animation Image transformation and effects Oil and Portrait painting Film editing Transformation tools Editing and Layers tools Basic image processing Overall, Photoshop Elements has many of the same image editing features of Photoshop. However, some of the features found in Photoshop are outside the scope of Photoshop Elements, including: Photoshop includes a database of over 100 tools and 3,400 commands. Photoshop Elements includes a database of 933 tools and 2,000 commands. The filter functionality of Photoshop is quite extensive and is not as simple as the filter interface in Photoshop Elements. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image forming apparatus provided with a plurality of image forming units. 2. Description of the Related Art Image forming apparatuses, such as MFPs (Multi Function Peripherals), provided with a plurality of image forming units, each including an image carrier on which an image is formed, an image forming unit body in which the image carrier is accommodated and a conveying unit (hereinafter referred to as image forming units) are known. When these image forming apparatuses are used, such as when they are connected to a host apparatus and when image forming operation is performed by the host apparatus, such as when a job request from the host apparatus is received, the image forming units in the image forming apparatus are switched on and off in accordance with the received job request so that image forming processing can be performed on a plurality of sheets of paper. The images are sequentially formed on sheets of paper in an image forming apparatus provided with a plurality of image forming units. Here, the operation states of the image forming units while the image forming operation is performed by the image forming apparatus are sequentially listed, for example, as a difference between the image forming units. An example of the difference between the image forming units will be described below. For example, an image forming unit is switched on in accordance with job request from a host apparatus and the image forming unit performs image forming processing on a sheet of paper. In this case, when the image forming unit is switched on, the image forming unit is in a state in which an image forming start instruction is not received from the host apparatus. In other words, the image forming unit is in a state in which the image forming unit is not able to receive the image forming start instruction from the host apparatus. This state is defined as a state in which the image forming unit is waiting for the image forming start instruction from the host apparatus. Here, a state in which the image forming unit is in a state in which the image forming unit is waiting for the image forming start instruction from the host apparatus may also be called a state in which an image forming start instruction is not received from the host apparatus. Hereinafter, a state in which the image forming unit is in a state in which the image forming unit is waiting for the image forming start instruction from the host apparatus is referred to as a state in which an image forming start instruction is not received from the host apparatus. When the image
