The spontaneous pneumothorax is one of the major causes of death in young adults and most often occurs in people without a history of respiratory disease. In contrast to other causes of pneumothorax, spontaneous pneumothorax occurs without physical forces. The primary lesion is a rupture of subpleural blebs or bullae. The underlying pathophysiological mechanisms are various but the most important ones are the altered elastic properties of the lung parenchyma and a defective ability to repair the collapsed lung parenchyma. The differential diagnosis of the pneumothorax includes other air-filled spaces or lesions that are compressive or inflammatory in nature. The management of the pneumothorax is entirely surgical and includes evacuation of the air and pleural drainage through a chest tube. Surgery can consist of simple thoracotomy or more extensive operations that open up the thoracic wall in order to resect the bullae. Different pathophysiological and pathogenetic mechanisms play an important role

Da li su moje uzre će i kupit će li mogu? Start. Activation of the beta-adrenergic receptors induces a desensitization of the adenylate cyclase in freshly dispersed lung cells. The activity of adenylate cyclase is strongly inhibited by the beta-receptor agonists isoproterenol and fenoterol in freshly dispersed fetal rat lung cells. The desensitization of adenylate cyclase is maximal within 5 min of incubation at 37 degrees C and is blocked by the tyrosine kinase inhibitor genistein. The adenylate cyclase system is thus rapidly inactivated through an autocatalytic mechanism. The beta-receptor-mediated desensitization is not produced when the cells are preincubated at 20 degrees C before addition of the agonists. This shows that the state of labilization of the adenylate cyclase is not due to a denaturation of the membrane. Biography of Dr. Gunther von Hagens, the founder and director of the Institute for Pathology in Heidelberg, Germany (translated from the original German, 1989). An important early biographer of Galen, he developed a method of re-creating the human body and the preservation of animal, vegetable, and mineral materials using formaldehyde and isopropanol. During the 1960s, he introduced a number of novel techniques for teaching anatomy. He also conducted important research into medical (e.g., he described an aldehyde-reactive substance secreted by blood-forming cells) and natural sciences (e.g., he discovered myosin in human and avian muscle, learned of the existence of a neuronal glycogen store, and discovered the calcium-dependent membrane receptor for gonadotropin-releasing hormone and its sequence). He has been the subject of numerous biographical accounts, including some by himself (1979) and others that he edited (Höchtl et al. 1989). Frederick L. Brown Frederick Lawrence Brown (August 30, 1860 - November 17, 1924) was a
