The GM300 is also a compact yet powerful FM transmitter. it has a programmable memory that allows you to save up to fifty. Pages Friday, May 11, 2009 Friday links *President Obama makes a speech on the importance of education in his weekly address. (The New York Times) Speaking of public education, Douglas Smith's news story on school board members, and their efforts to have the space donated for a new school reopens, does a nice job of bringing the reality of the situation of the lack of funding in rural public schools in the state of Vermont to life for the rest of us. The five biggest investments the state could make in the future to spur innovation, according to a report from a committee of the Legislature's Joint Fiscal Office. (Herald) Today, I went to the Media Center at the Morgan Library to join the Digital Future Learning Network for the second time in a week, to see what is up with developing the curriculum and design of the state's learning standards. We had a busy week last week, so it was nice to catch up again with my friends from the DePaul faculty, Roxanne Bahner and Michael Armstrong. When it comes to raising children, Paris is a bit of a dream, according to the parents who live there. Paris is filled with theaters, museums, and cultural activities. Parents receive two months of free tuition at the renowned Lycée Albert Camus, world-famous schools with nearly 10,000 students enrolled worldwide. (New York Times) As a parent of two young children, I am hyper-aware of parents who use their children as drug-testing machines. The range of options available, for both parents and children, is impressive, and worth checking out. 1 comment: About Me Ammon and I recently bought a house, and are in the process of moving and doing up the rest of the place. We live with my parents, plus all of our stuff, so we have a lot to clean. A lot of the cleaning and organizing will be done online, and we have a number of high-tech gadgets which will facilitate this.
