Gin Gin Province, Afghanistan - As the sun sets in Afghanistan, it touches the tops of the mountains and spires to the west. Their golden reflections bathe the village of Kajaki, a sleepy hamlet nestled in a narrow valley, and sink away into the purple horizon. The village of Kajaki is at the intersection of two major rivers, a major highway, and the lifeline to Kabul. The people of Kajaki are just one of the 400 villages in this remote corner of Afghanistan and "here at the end of the world", as villagers like to call it, is likely to be an understatement. The people of Kajaki are subsistence farmers. A small stream, which flows from a mountain peak to join the Ghazni river, carves a path into the valley. Its waters nourish the lush fields of mustard and corn
