It's all fun stuff, but what truly makes Sugg, and his fans, who overwhelmingly support it, happy is when he gets jingles to play, something his followers didn't even know until recently. The most recent example of that is when he got the new songs from M.I.A. You guessed it. I'll be doing Sugg songs this month all the way until M.I.A. is done. In the present study the characteristics of extracellularly recorded activities of cortical cells were examined during a prolonged visual stimulation in the unanesthetized adult guinea pig. Evoked potentials were defined by their latency, their shape, and their spatial distribution. The analysis of single cells in the different cortical layers as well as of the response patterns of the different groups of units confirmed that the large majority of units was non-spiking. Non-spiking cells were activated with different time courses after flashes of different length and of different intensities. However, the temporal pattern of responses was not affected by changes in stimulus intensity. For the most part of non-spiking units, a stimulation with a fixed retinal image was followed by a decrease in excitability while a new response to a flickering image was initiated by an increase in excitability. To some extent, the classification of the units into different classes of units depends on the response pattern. All fast-spiking units and two out of three slow-spiking units were identified as belonging to the ON-class of the cat, while the remaining units were of the OFF-class. It is concluded that the response pattern of cortical cells in the guinea pig is qualitatively similar to that in the cat./* Copyright (C) 2001-2006, William Joseph. All Rights Reserved.
