Developer: Inkle Publisher: Inkle VR Game What do you think? – Leave a review »Q: How to keep git log the same but only show the commit messages of the last 3 commits? I have a git log that gives me the following output: This would be straightforward to accomplish, except that I actually don't want the commit date, author, and email of the 2nd and 3rd commits, I just want the commit messages to be shown. Is there some way to only show the commit messages from the last 3 commits? A: You can make it sort them by date to see the messages of the last 3 commits: git log --oneline --reverse --before=3 or git log --reverse --oneline --before=3 --left-right to see the first one or the others. --before and --after are the same in this case: they move the commits on top of the previous and the following commits, respectively. Anomalous targeting of a type I transmembrane protein, the human erythrocyte glycophorin A, to the clathrin coated pits and lipid rafts. The glycosylated type I transmembrane protein glycophorin A (GPA) is known to play a crucial role in cell-cell recognition during erythropoiesis. In erythrocytes, GPA is localized in lipid rafts, which are special membrane microdomains enriched in sphingolipids and cholesterol and serve as platforms for signal transduction and membrane sorting. We have analyzed the subcellular targeting of GPA in relation to lipid raft/clathrin coated pits (CCP) composition using two different approaches: enzyme-catalyzed lectin-binding and glycosidase treatment, followed by immuno-fluorescence microscopy and immuno-precipitation experiments. GPA-driven lectin binding was only observed to occur in GPA-enriched membrane microdomains (MID). GPA was also associated with a lipid raft-like membrane microdomain and CCPs. Both types of microdomain could co-exist within one erythrocyte. GPA is localized in lipid rafts and CCPs of human erythrocytes, bff6bb2d33
