One of the most memorable by-lines about the four big parties was the statement, "...but in the end it's that matter of who you can turn out." In her speech, Liberal candidate Sheila MacCrimmon said that in the next election, "The people of Canada are asking for change. They are asking for a government that will work for all Canadians, not just those at the top." This is a rather insightful statement. It got me thinking about how we can encourage more eligible voters to participate in our elections. As someone who has regularly participated in Federal elections twice, I know that it is sometimes quite discouraging to think about all the hoops you have to jump through. There's the long list of election rules and documents to do your advance polling and voting, and then there are

Entertainment News EXCLUSIVE: 'The Lion King' Concept Art Turns Up On Google Welcome to the new world of online searches! After a bunch of social networks, it looks like Google's search box can also have a helping hand. A lot of digging has led us to a previously unseen concept art for Disney's "The Lion King". The concept artwork, first spotted by @CindyWithered on Twitter, was originally uncovered back in 2004 and created by animal concept artist Jeremy Soule who went on to help "Up" and "John Carter." The colouring of the artwork has been changed since the project was green-lit for release and it's now accompanied by photos and clip-art of animals, vehicles and even props. Here's a shot of the original concept. A recent post on the "Scribble for Impact" Facebook page reveals that Jeremy Soule is attached to create concept art for the new animated version. Will it look similar? What will be included? Only time will tell. The Lion King is slated for release on July 19th, 2014. The trailer is below.
