The A . First, remove any material that is obstructing the to remove debris before painting. It is important to clean and brush the surface well before you can apply the gel coat. This can be done with a airbrush or a foam brush. All of the paint is wiped off before you apply the gel coat, without leaving any paint deposits on the surface of the part. Paint the surface of the part very well to remove all debris before application. 8 See Painted Flat Metal Brackets.Digital X-ray systems and computers are employed as essential support tools in a wide range of applications. For example, in the oil industry, downhole applications require a highly accurate and dependable method of determining the amount and location of hydrocarbons in rock strata and the like. In general, it is necessary to perform such analysis before the hydrocarbons are produced from the underground formations. The aforementioned analysis is typically carried out using X-ray gauging. X-ray gauging is performed using X-ray gauging tools with one or more X-ray gauging sensors, which may be rotating (i.e., CT scanners) or non-rotating (i.e., radiographic gauges). The X-ray sensors typically detect X-rays that are emitted from a source within the X-ray gauging tool and/or from a sensor within the X-ray gauging tool. The X-ray sensors may include, for example, Anger-type sensors, CdZnTe sensors, or FPA-type (Forster-Perano-Anderson) sensors. X-ray gauging tools may be mounted to a drilling string and operated in combination with a drill bit at the end of the drilling string. For example, the X-ray gauging tools are mounted to the drilling string at a distal end of the drilling string. The X-ray gauging tools may be rotatable about the distal end of the drilling string. Other types of drilling equipment also typically include rotatable X-ray gauging tools. X-ray gauging tools, and many associated electrical components, are housed in a metallic tubular structure referred to in the art as a "shoe." The X-ray gauging sensors are typically electrical components mounted on, or in a component such as, a printed circuit board, which is electrically and mechanically mounted inside the shoe. The printed circuit board, in turn, is electrically connected to the X-ray

Significant variation in practice for the management of acute
coronary syndrome
(ACS) in Ireland has been reported \[[@B1]\]. This study aimed to identify current practice in management of ACS in

---

Dublin General Hospitals and to determine whether an ACS protocol was in place and if so, what its implementation
was. Methods

An audit of existing protocols was performed to identify all points of possible
deviation from ACS guidelines. Results
===== No specific

---

protocol for ACS was found in six of seven Dublin General Hospitals.

Five protocols for management of ACS were identified.

Conclusion

Protocols were identified but none specifically addressed the diagnosis and management of ACS. We concluded that these protocols are deficient in management and point of care

practice in this area and that these protocols do not encourage standardised practice.

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a semiconductor device and a method of forming the same, and more particularly to a semiconductor device having an insulating layer containing a nitrogen-containing silicon oxide film having a good dielectric property and a method of forming the same. 2. Description of the Related Art Electrical insulating layers (e.g., interlayer insulating layers) are formed between respective layers in semiconductor devices to electrically insulate the respective layers from each other. As the integration level of the semiconductor devices has increased, the size of the respective elements has decreased and the distance between the respective elements has decreased. It is thus desirable that the respective insulating layers have small thicknesses in order to decrease the size of the elements and the distance between the respective elements. On the other hand, if the insulating layers have small thicknesses, the respective layers will be adversely affected by the high integration density. Thus, as the integration level of the semiconductor devices has increased, insulating layers formed between respective layers in the semiconductor devices have been required to be formed of materials having a good dielectric property (which is referred to hereinafter as a good dielectric property). For example, a silicon oxide film formed by a dry oxidation process and a silicon nitride film formed by a low-pressure chemical vapor deposition (LPCVD) have been used in forming the insulating layers, however, such insulating layers cannot meet the requirement of the good dielectric property. Furthermore, as the integration level of the semiconductor devices has increased, it is also required that the respective insulating layers have
