Every month we gather statistics and provide tips to help you learn more about the world's biggest and best football players. Asics Player Ball Project We recently teamed up with Asics and ITV to create an innovative prototype foot which could potentially be used during international and club matches to better understand the physical demands of the game. Using elements such as VR technology and sensors, we worked with Asics to design a total game-improvement solution. Xyloglucan and Arabinogalactan-proteins in root nodules of alfalfa. Root nodules of the pea mutant alfalfa lack spongy parenchyma and have a thickened pericycle. The wall is composed of a thinner pericycle cell layer that contains a radially oriented, elongated crystal, consisting of crystal protein-embedded xyloglucan. The protein moieties are tightly bound to the crystal and the helical nature of the xyloglucan chain enables it to cross-link with other xyloglucan chains. The pericycle crystal is anchored to a thick cell wall. This anchoring is thought to be at least partially due to an extension of the pericycle wall from the pericycle cells, since the extension has been shown to form for the pea mutant alfalfa and for kidney bean that has a similar crystal structure in roots and nodules. Xyloglucan is also present in the nodule parenchyma cells, but is not concentrated in the walls. The cell walls
