The animals were assigned to three groups according to the distance of the tantalum implant to the medial or lateral femoral condyle: group 1 (n=5), the defect was implanted with particles at the subchondral surface of the femoral condyle; group 2 (n=2), the particles were implanted in the lateral subchondral cortex; and group 3 (n=1), the particles were implanted in the medial subchondral cortex. Healing was assessed by X-ray analysis, and the involvement of subchondral stress was assessed by the use of a stress-strain device.
