The game is a pinball game where the player has to create new and better balls to score points. In the process, the player can also change the graphics of the game by changing the appearance of the ball. The iDancer is being included by other software like the ArcSoft Pinball III, MacPinball and Evolution Pinball. It has also been integrated into the Atari TT and the Atari ST. The iDancer was programmed by Joey Larrick. The iDancer was released as a source code for the MS-DOS with its original game graphics in 1984. The game was considered the best arcade-style pinball game. The iDancer was published as a standalone program by Atari Corp. in 1987. In 2014, iDancer is scheduled to be included as a free software in the Atari Flashback Pack. A graphics-oriented version of the original iDancer was created in Flash. There are also an open source source at desura. The iOS version of the software was also created in 2014. As of February 2016, the official website of iDancer is available in the Internet Archive. The software is no longer being sold by Atari. Instead, it is currently licensed to Arcade Labs who makes software for various arcade cabinets. The latest version is currently available at the site and is being sold for $0.99. Police arrested a man who was involved in an assault in the Sokoine Road area of Doha just after midnight on Sunday. Earlier reports indicated that two men had been shot following the incident.
