To mark the occasion, the museum will show a special exhibit by French surrealist painter, Robert Berson, an artist who captured the astounding beauty of the fair's architecture at the time and who also is the museum's chief architectural critic. His exhibit, titled `Un Paysage Créole,' is one of the largest and most important exhibitions the museum has ever mounted. It runs for eight months. The exhibit features some of the artist's most magnificent oil paintings, showing the architectural masterpieces of the 1904 World's Fair, including the Treasury Building, the Palace of Agriculture, the Waterworks, the Beaux Arts Administration Building, the Brauer and Dufour flour mill, the Mohawk and Fort Garry hotels and the Upper Hall of the Art Museum, all of which have been meticulously cleaned and restored. The two-room exhibit, including many of the artist's oil paintings, is a powerful revelation of that long-vanished fair and American architectural history. I wonder how many millions of Americans, including St. Louisans, have visited the fair because of their love of Norman Rockwell's oil paintings
